Abstract

Making the Best of Teaching Online

We are now teaching our students remotely, and we have no choice but to try to do it as effectively as possible. For making our teaching effectively we need to think how can we encourage our students to participate actively in online classes? At the same time how can we help them to become autonomous learners? The presenter will explore these issues and suggest some solutions. Participation from the audience will be encouraged.

About the Presenter

Claire Bradin Siskin is a consultant, teacher trainer, and practitioner of computer-assisted language learning (CALL). She has 20 years of classroom experience as an instructor of ESL/EFL. She recently completed a three-year term on the Board of Directors of TESOL. She has a strong interest in international education and has given presentations and workshops in 24 countries.
